

Alysha Jeffers is in her fourth year teaching at WGDC and currently leads the studio's acting classes. A former feature twirler at the University of West Georgia, she has always had a deep passion for all aspects of the performing arts—from dance to acting and everything in between. Alysha began performing casually in plays during elementary school, but it was high school drama that truly sparked her love for acting, introducing her to the classics and the power of storytelling. Since taking over the acting classes at WGDC a year ago, Alysha has loved watching her students grow and evolve. Her goal is to inspire each student to discover their own love of performance and to feel confident expressing themselves both on stage and beyond. She believes that when passion is combined with fun, learning becomes an unforgettable experience, and that is exactly what she strives to create in every class.
